Seven thoughts

Our response as the Government sets out its next steps for Children's social care in England.

Dear Roger/sue,

Earlier this month, the Government responded to the Independent Review of Children's Social Care in England.

At Home for Good, we are particularly pleased the Government's new strategy acknowledges the importance of family-based care and that the Government has committed to increasing provision and take-up of supported lodgings.

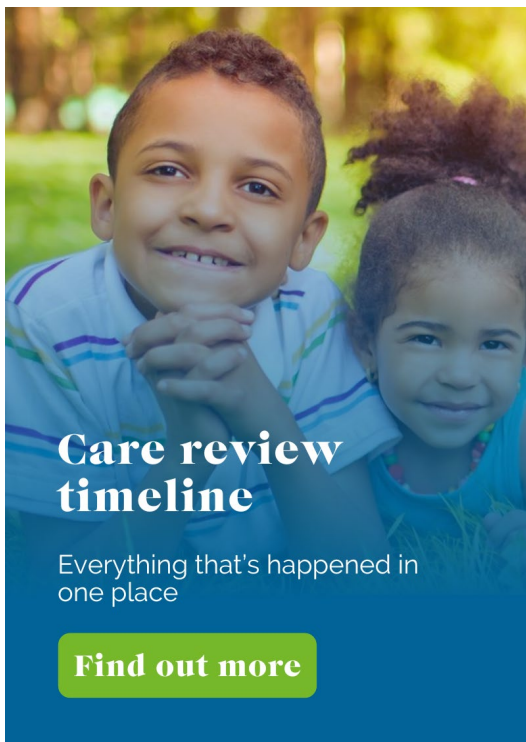

With your support, we worked tirelessly to raise the profile of supported lodgings among the Independent Review team, politicians and policy makers. So, we see it as a win that the Government has endorsed supported lodgings as a credible family-based care option for the growing number teenagers in the care system.

At Home for Good, we are resolved in our commitment to spark systemic improvements to children's social care across the UK. There is still much work to do to ensure that the Government delivers on its intentions, but for now do join us in celebrating another step towards finding a home for every child who needs one.
